The War of the Worlds

More than 100 years ago, an English author named H.G. Wells wrote a book called "The War of the Worlds." It was about a story that has become a classic in science fiction and has been the subject of countless adaptations over the years.

Wells' story begins with an announcement on the radio that Martians have landed on Earth. The inhabitants of the planet are thrown into a state of panic as they listen to the news about the Martians' descent.

The radio broadcast created a sensation and led to widespread rumors of Martians and other extraterrestrial creatures. The story was so convincing that it led to a real-life panic known as the War of the Worlds.

The Mercury Theater, under the direction of Orson Welles, performed an adaptation of the story on the radio, which added to the confusion and fear.

Today, about 80 years after the original story, the "War of the Worlds" has become a symbol of the power of the media and the impact of fear on society.

Meet Bobb'e J. Thompson

Bobb'e J. Thompson is the voice of Cal Weathers in "That's So Raven." He has also appeared in several other shows, including "Cloudy With a Chance of Meatballs" and "King of the Hill.

Bobb'e has also appeared in several commercials and has been a source of news. "I once had a great fear of spiders," he said. "But I wrote two books with a spider hero."